and slammed the door. It was then that Beach rapped loudly on the door, demanding, "It is me, Beach; let me in."

Mr. Gunter said he was confident that the presence of Miss Holmes in the house that night had saved Mrs. Beach's life. He said that there was no evidence to show that Beach's diamond-studded penknife was hanging to his watch chain that night and no evidence to disprove the State's theory that the blood which Dr. Wyman found on the knife was not from Mrs. Beach's throat.

Call Story Absurd.

"It is absurd," said the prosecutor, "for Beach to contend that he rushed upstairs, got his revolver and made an examination of the premises between the time three persons in the Wyman household heard the door slam and Beach's knock on the door."

The three attorneys who spoke for the defense charged that Beach had been persecuted, and said that if he had been an ordinary person on trial they never would have put on a single witness in defense against the "filmy case which they presented."

Congressman Byrnes declared that it was most extraordinary to find a case prosecuted in which the prosecuting witness was a witness for the defense. Judge W. C. Davis said it was a case "not an evidence, but a lack of evidence."

Colonel B. S. Henderson charged that the indictment against Beach had been brought on information obtained by a detective whom the prosecution "did not dare to produce."

Gets $250 Verdict.

Verdict and judgment were entered yesterday in the City Circuit Court in the case of Arden Howell against the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway Company in the sum of $250. Mr. Howell sued for $600, claiming damage to a tract of timber land set on fire by sparks from a passing locomotive.

PALSY-SHAKEN OLD MAN FOUND BY INQUISITORS

read the stenographer, "by my physician this examination is precarious to the condition of my throat. I desire, however, to make the effort, as I have not now, and never have had, any disposition to avoid testifying before your committee, except as I have been cautioned by my physician that doing so would endanger my life. If I find that the strain is too great for me to take further risk, I shall have to ask your indulgence in not pressing the examination further."

Whispers to Stenographer.

"As I have lost my voice, I would esteem it a privilege if you would permit me to whisper my answers to the official stenographer, who sits beside me and who will read them aloud. It is impossible for me to write them."

This was agreed to, and Mr. Untermyer stated the position of the committee as follows:

"Mr. Rockefeller, the chairman will expect you and your physicians to advise us if you feel at any time that your condition becomes such as to render further examination inadvisable. It must be clearly understood that neither the chairman nor counsel care to or are willing to assume any responsibility whatever on such a subject. You and your physician are the best judges of the situation, and we shall have to rely upon you under the circumstances disclosed by the testimony before the committee as to your physical condition. On that understanding, we will proceed with the examination."

The bowed head of the witness nodded assent, and the examination began in earnest.

"What is your residence?" asked Mr. Untermyer.

The strained face of the witness bent close to the ear of the waiting stenographer. For a few moments the room was silent except for the wheezy breathing of the Standard Oil magnate and the scratching of the stenographer's pen. The witness leaned back, and the stenographer read:

"Six hundred and eighty-nine Fifth Avenue, New York City."

"Referring to the statement just made by you, Mr. Rockefeller," said Mr. Untermyer, "it is currently reported that you are able to play golf and indulge in sports of that sort. What is the fact as to that?"

After another pause the stenographer read the answer:

"I have never played a game of golf in my life. I try to take open air exercise every day. That is the extent of my amusement—taking outdoor exercise."

"Do you recall the occasion of the organization of the Amalgamated Copper Company in 1898?" demanded Mr. Untermyer.

The witness breathed heavily, his trembling hands clutching the table in front of him, and he seemed to control himself with a great effort as he again leaned to the ear of the stenographer. Then came the answer in the mechanical, monotonous tone of the clerk:

"Yes."

"Was it in 1898?" asked Mr. Untermyer.

Once more the bent form of the oil magnate leaned toward the stenographer. He had hardly begun to move his lips before a straining, whistling cough shook his frame. He fell back into his chair, a flood of red sweeping over the gray-white pallor of his face. The trembling of his hands and the wagging of his head became more violent, and the muscles of his face and neck contracted and expanded spasmodically.

"I think it was in 1898," he replied in a whisper.

The stenographer repeated the answer automatically, but he had scarcely spoken before Dr. Chappelle was on his feet. He hurried to the side of the witness and addressed Chairman Pujos:

termier turned to the witness: "Mr. Rockefeller, you have heard Dr. Chappelle's statement. Do you feel in such condition that you think it unsafe to proceed further?"

The bent form swayed toward the stenographer and the throat muscles labored heavily as he endeavored to whisper.

"I certainly do," repeated the stenographer.

"The chair states," said Mr. Pujos, "that in view of the declaration by Dr. Chappelle under oath, and also that of the witness, Mr. Rockefeller, besides what is manifest from the appearance and condition of the witness, no further proceedings will be had at this time."

"I would be unwilling," also said Mr. Untermyer, "to go further with the examination at this time from what I have just heard and observed as to Mr. Rockefeller's condition."

As the Standard Oil magnate leaned wearily back in his chair, Mr. Pujos and Mr. Untermyer, with their attendants, filed out of the room. After a luncheon at the Jekyll Island Club house they returned to Brunswick. Both publicly declared they were satisfied that any further examination of Mr. Rockefeller was impossible.

Mr. Pujos left for Washington on an afternoon train, and Mr. Untermyer went south to Palm Beach, where he will work on the money trust report for two weeks.

Knows Law Like SUPREME COURT

Charlottesville Police Justice Makes State Pay Warrant Fees in Labor Cases.

Many obstacles were thrown in the way of prosecuting violators of labor laws by Police Justice C. D. Shackelford, of Charlottesville, according to a report made yesterday by Labor Commissioner Doherty by Inspector J. B. Clinebinst. However, at the trial the record stood by the statute and ordered the enforcement of the law.

When Inspector Clinebinst applied for warrants against seven firms of that city charging violation of the law requiring separate sanitary arrangements for male and female employees, the police justice first remarked that some of the best people in the city were accused. He then said he would not issue warrants against three of them, on the ground that but one male or one female was affected along with those of the other sex—that is, a store might be run by a man whose clerks were all women, and that in that case they could use the same appliances. When the inspectors said courts elsewhere had all applied the law to the opposite effect, the police justice replied that he knew as much law as all other Virginia courts, and as much as the Supreme Court, adding that if the warrants were issued he would dismiss them at the trial.

Further, he demanded fees for issuing warrants, something heretofore unheard of in Mr. Clinebinst's experience. But the inspectors paid the $7, turning in his receipt yesterday to Mr. Doherty. Justice Shackelford later said he issued the warrants as a magistrate and tried them as police justice. This phase of the matter will be referred to the Attorney-General.

On trial the parties were given until April 1st to make the necessary changes, judgment being suspended. The accused were as follows: Home Steam Laundry, A. C. Brechin & Son, W. J. Keller & Co. Model Steam Laundry, P. E. Obendorfer, I. Lovenstein, R. C. Trevillian.
